Additional Information

Plan early. Transfer applicants are strongly encouraged to connect with a Texas A&M University admissions counselor as soon as an interest in Texas A&M University is identified. Early consultation with an admissions counselor can help the prospective student identify an appropriate path toward transfer admission. Admissions counselors are available in person and by telephone or email in Prospective Student Centers across the state of Texas, as well as on campus in the Aggieland Prospective Student Center.

Applicants are encouraged to use the required essay as an opportunity to identify their past accomplishments, discuss what they hope to study at Texas A&M University, and describe how their education will help them meet goals after graduation. Application essays are read and reviewed for content, presentation and style.

Mays admits 100 transfer students each year. Transfer students are admitted for summer or fall semesters only. No spring admissions. Successful applicants have required coursework complete at time of application with consistently excellent grades. Mays transfer admission is highly competitive. Applicants need a grade of 'A' in most courses to be competitive. Courses in progress at the time of application are considered incomplete. Mays admits its complete transfer admission class in the original review of applications; as such, spring grades are not considered for summer or fall transfer admission decisions.

Preference is given to applicants ready to join Mays' junior class upon arrival at Texas A&M.

Mays' undergraduate program is subject to strict enrollment management. Although no minimum GPA is required, the competitive nature of transfer admission to Mays results in denial of many highly qualified applicants. Second choice majors are not accepted.
